Mr. Boothroyd,

Becky Johnson has proved once again that she just cannot get it right in her latest article “Row over property values in Haywood still raging unabated” . As I have said before, she is a slow learner. She wrote:

“Other than righteous indignation I have not heard anyone attempt to defend Francis’ numbers,” Miller said.

If the revaluation was so off, Francis responded, then why didn’t Miller appeal his property values?

“I think my numbers are so good he didn’t even appeal his,” Francis said.

There is a disconnect between what Becky Johnson quoted what I said during my public comment at the last commission meeting verses the response she quoted Francis as saying.

At all times, when I have referred to “Francis’ numbers”, I have referred to the spread sheet that he created of total property values for Haywood County for the period of time between 2006 and 2011. See the attached spread sheet, also on my website, [www.haywoodtp.net.]

Judy Ballard indicated to me on May 19th, that there are two inputs she uses to update the spreadsheet:

- The pre-bill. That is the sum of all tax bills sent to taxpayers each year. Since they don’t change each year (unless there is a change in the actual tax rate), that is basically a constant or baseline number, and
- New Construction. Each year, values of new construction are added to the sum of the pre-bills.

David Francis qualified those two items the next day by adding that if a house burned down, it was removed.

As I indicated to Assistant Attorney General Mark Teague on June 3rd, “There is no provision for any decrease, unless a house burns down, then it is removed. The fatal flaw in his assessment is that he fails to account for any decrease due to a drop in demand or any other factor.”

During all this time since originally pointing out this fatal flaw in Francis’ [spreadsheet] numbers, and I’ll say it again, “Other than righteous indignation I have not heard anyone attempt to defend Francis’ numbers” . They are not defensible.

So, as you can see, I was referring to Francis' spreadsheet numbers, and Becky Johnson turned the entire context upside down and quoted Francis responding on a completely different subject. Isn't that incompetent or something?

It's been a while since I have seen Becky Johnson covering a county commission meeting, and was surprised to see her at the last meeting. You should consider re-assigning Colby Dunn back to covering the meetings. She really wasn't doing that bad of a job.

Regards,

Monroe A. Miller Jr.
